If you subscribe to the theory that golf's inclusion into the 2016 Olympic Games will spark a growth spurt for it a few factors needed to be considered. In order for participation levels to increase there has to be infrastructure meanings courses as well as driving ranges. That means there will be a delayed effect in the underdeveloped regions that don't have this already in place. "The recession has not been as severe here as it has been in the States, 90 percent of my work, golf course design work now, is here in Asia," Jack Nicklaus, the Golden Bear stated. There is the money ticket in the short term. To read more click here
