

NEVER LET THEM SEE YOU SWEAT:

Written by TMAC GOLF
Monday, 04 August 2008 12:46

The final major for 2008 is here. Players have one last chance before No.1 is back in the mix for the next major championship to be contested. This year's PGA Championship is being held at Oakland Hills' South course in Michigan. This championship in particular is synonymous for players feeling the heat, literally and figuratively. While it can be debated whether the last chance for glory in a playing season holds more or less pressure, than the other three majors, the PGA Championship is traditionally held under stifling heat. However, there is some relief arriving from one apparel company to try and take some of the heat off of its players.

Nike Golf's Tour staff members will be wearing two specific technologies, which is said perform in the most extreme conditions. The two technologies, DriFIT UV and Nike Sphere Dry promise to provide best in class in moisture management, cooling and UV protection.